

Gregory Maney, director of active citizenship at the Center for Civic Engagement, Hofstra University, spoke about "Explaining Political Violence Against Citizens in Northern Ireland: A Contention-Oriented Approach" on February 20, 2014, at the Mershon Center

Gregory Maney's research explores how transnational structures and external actors intensified domestic trends in levels and forms of political contention in Northern Ireland during the 1960s and early 1970s.

Through a grant from the National Science Foundation, Gregory Maney along with Eitan Alimi is examining the role of news media outlets in political violence during the early Troubles in Northern Ireland and the first Palestinian Intifada.
